SECTION D: Socio-economic background

The University recognizes the disadvantages caused by socially created inequalities like an applicant's gender, their family's caste, religion, occupation, income, education and so on. There is strong evidence that social origins are connected with poor representation in institutions of higher education. As a part of its commitment to equity and justice, we attempt to at least partially balance these structured inequalities via a system of awarding all applicants a disadvantage score in addition to the score secured by them in the entrance test. Points are assigned to different aspects of the socio-economic background of every applicant, which will be added up, to arrive at an overall socio-economic disadvantage score. If an applicant scores say 50 in the entrance test and has a socio-economic disadvantage score of say 13, the final test score for admission purposes will be  $50+13=63$ .

The below information is sought only for purposes of estimating the score and compensating for social disadvantage and will be kept strictly confidential.
